or reary for the Panel Advocates Changing Structure Of U.S. Military

By Bill Keller

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - A diverse group of experts, including some of the members of Congress who are most influential on military matters, has agreed to push this year for a sweeping restructuring of the U.S. military operation.

The group, concluding an 18of actions month study, contends in a draft report that the current military or-ganization, which it says is para-lyzed by rivalries between the army, navy, air force, and Marine Corps, is the underlying cause of bloated budgets, poor combat readiness, and a lack of coordination in operations,

To resolve these problems, the group will propose to give the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff new powers as a presidential adviser in an effort to override squabbling among the services.

The recommendations, which are to be published next month, would also strengthen the powers of regional military commanders who conduct combat operations, streamline the budgeting and plan-ning operations of the Defense Department, and alter the role of Congress in handling the military

If adopted, the recommendations would represent the most drastic changes in military manage ment since the administration of President Dwight D. Eisenhower, when a number of measures were enacted to strengthen the powers of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the secretary of defense.

But some of the latest proposals are likely to meet resistance from the Reagan administration, according to recent interviews with administration officials concerned with the military.

The study was financed by the Ford and Rockefeller Foundations. It was conducted by a panel of former Defense Department officials, members of Congress, and academics that was assembled by the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International

> The Joint Chiefs of Staff, now headed by General John W. Vessey Jr., is made up of the chairman and top officers of the army, navy, air force and Marine Corps. It advises the president and oversees operations of the four services.

> The draft report said a "stagnated" military structure was "the single most important cause of the grave problems that now confront the United States in managing its > national defense efforts." "Unless the procedural and organizational deficiencies underlying these problems are identified and corrected, no realistic level of defense spending will be sufficient to meet the needs of the nation's security," the draft said. Philip A. Odeen, a partner in the accounting firm of Coopers & Lybrand and chairman of the steering committee that directed the Georgetown study, said in an interview that the strength of individual service fiels has resulted in an emphasis on costly new weapons and research programs at the expense of ammunition, spare parts, airlift, and other essentials of combat readiness that are run by the weaker joint commands. Mr. Odeen, who was a Defense Department analyst in the 1960s and a National Security Council adviser in the administration of President Richard M. # U.S. Says GNP In 1984 Made In 3 Decades

By Jane Scaberry

WASHINGTON - New figures on the U.S. gross national product show that the economy grew 6.8 percent in 1984, the sharpest rise in more than three decades, and that inflation was the lowest it has been in 17 years, the Commerce Department reported Tuesday.

The U.S. economy also appeared to be rebounding during the last three months of the year from its summer slump.

GNP measures the total value of a nation's output of goods and services, including income from foreign investments. A price index tied to the GNP showed that inflation totaled 3.7 percent last year, down from 3.8 percent in 1983 and 6 percent in 1982, the department said.

The department also reported that from October through December consumer spending increased and the U.S. trade balance improved for the first time in three

The GNP report was called "re-markable" by the White House. "If this were almost any other country in the world, the economic perfor-mance of the Umited States would be termed a miracle," said Larry Speakes, the chief White House spokesman. "Indeed, it has been mpressive."

GNP increased 3.9 percent in the fourth quarter after a rise from July to September of 1.6 percent. At that time some economists expressed the fear that the slump would carry over into the first half of 1985 and that there was a remote chance of another recession.

However, in the fourth quarter consumer spending rose smartly and fewer dollars were spent on imported goods, the Commerce Department said.

Inflation, as measured by the price index, was 2.4 percent in the fourth quarter, down from a 3.9percent rate in the third quarter. The index is called the implicit price deflator, and measures changes in prices and the composition of output, not only price

"The economy comes into 1985 with definitely strong apward momentum and we continue to look for growth between 3 percent and 4.5 percent for the year," said Allen Sinai, chief economist for Shearson Lehman/American Express. "The prospects for inflation remain outte

The 6.8-percent increase in GNP last year was the sharpest increase since an 8.3-percent rise in 1951. the Commerce Department said GNP rose 3.7 percent in 1983 and contracted by 2.1 percent in 1982.

The Reagan administration is counting on growth of at least 4 percent this year to help reduce the federal budget deficit through reduction is spending and increases in tax revenues resulting from an improved economy.

Some economists doubt that the administration will get its wish and are predicting growth of slightly above 3 percent for 1985.

With lower interest rates and inflation under control, the economy is in a good position to achieve the 4-percent growth expected by the administration over the course of 1985," said Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige. "To reinforce the staying power of this expansion in the years ahead, our first priority must be a reduction in the federal deficit to help hold down inflation and bring down interest rates fur-

The trade picture also improved in the fourth quarter, marking the first improvement in three years, Mr. Baldrige said. Net exports adjusted for inflation increased $11.8 billion in the fourth quarter, in contrast to a decline of $15.6 billion in the third quarter. Although total year that his office had received exports decreased $1.2 billion, total imports declined $13 billion in contrast to an increase of $18.2 billion in the third quarter.

Reagan's Address: A Subdued Look Back on Familiar Goals

fearful that Monday's speech, which was largely written by the president himself, lacked the punch and power of his first inaugural address. Mr. Reagan had some respectful bipartisan gestures toward senior Democratic politicians. Indeed some Democratic leaders found his speech less combative and partisan than his first inaugural address. But Mr. Reagan betrayed no lessening of his conservative fervor, set out no overarching imperatives that demanded biparrisan cooperation and signaled no visible drive for compromise at home or abroad. To the Russians, he sent the strong mes-

the sake of an arms agreement. Indeed, Mr. Reagan put more stress on the space defense than on an arms agreement.

To congressional Democrats, he did not offer any hint of moderation on his campaign to shrink domestic programs and to combat huge federal deficits without raising taxes. Answering congressional pressures to slow military spending, Mr. Reagan argued that "there is only one way safely and legitimately to reduce the cost of national security," and that is through arms control. To his rightist partisans, he reaffirmed their favorite goals: a push for a constitu-tional amendment to balance the budget, an allusion to banning abortion, a pledge to try again for a program to revitalize inner cities and a promise to build an "opportunity society" by freeing private enterprise and welfare recipients from a bloated government.

His most tantalizing allusion was his receition of Abraham Lincoln with a refpose and that some of his subordinates erate private business and reduce believe should eventually be sacrificed for dependence on welfare programs. "Our fundamental goals must be to reduce dependency and upgrade the dignity of those who are infirm or disadvantaged. Mr. Reagan said. "And here, a growing economy and support from family and community offer our best chance for a society where compassion is a way of life."

In this, some Democrats saw a rationale for what they expect to be harsh new cuts in social programs when Mr. Reagan sends his budget to Congress in two weeks.

For the most part, however, the Democrats let Mr. Reagan have his day in the sun, offering to cooperate in efforts for peace and hailing his evocation of patriotic themes. But few found his address as powerful as they had expected.

One Republican, asking not to be quoted by name, recalled that at the Republican Convention in Dallas, Mr. Reagan's acceptance speech had been rambling diffuse, and not up to his usual par. But this occa-

Prime Minister David Lange, since his election last July, has remained committed to his Labor Party's policy of forbidding port calls by ships carrying nuclear arms or powered by nuclear engines, in effect making it impossible for any U.S. warship to visit.

The Reagan administration would not disclose details about the ship, which it would like to send to New Zealand in March. In Wellington on Monday, the New Zealand government said it would not decide on the American port call request for several weeks.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who has urged Mr. Lange to be more flexible, has said that for an alliance to have any meaning the military forces of the members should be allowed "to interact" by port calls and other joint actions.

Moreover, the last ANZUS alliance communiqué, signed by the three allies on the eve of Mr. Lange's taking office, said that they "agreed that defense cooperation, including combined exercises, visits and logistics support arrangements, played an essential part in promoting mumal security.

For the last six months, the United States and Australia have been quietly urging Mr. Lange, to no avail, to drop the anti-nuclear stance, officials said.

The last high-level visit by an American to New Zealand was by Lieutenant General John T. Chain Ir. of the U.S. Air Force, director of the State Department's bureau of politico-military affairs, who briefed Mr. Lange 11 days ago on the recent U.S.-Soviet arms control talks in Geneva and discussed the nuclear issue.

As a matter of long-standing policy, the United States will not disclose whether a ship carries nuclear weapons. Thus for a government to ban any U.S. warship with such weapons, it would, in effect, have

WASHINGTON - More than 1,000 Peravians have disappeared after being detained by police and the military, and another 400 have been reported killed since nine mountain provinces in southern Peru were placed under military administration two years ago, Amnesty International reported Tues-

A report by the London-based human rights group said that it had documented 1,005 "disappearances" in the area by the end of 1984. A disappearance is considered to take place when a person is taken into custody by the authorities or with their connivance, and the authorities later deny that the victim is detained.

"Human rights violations on this scale are unprecedented in modern Peru," Amnesty International said. The victims have been, for the most part, peasants, local leaders, teachers and students.

Amnesty International acknowldged that it has received reports of scores of killings" by leftist Shining Path guerrillas and emphasized that it condemns torture and killings by them as well.

The commission meetings, which ended Tuesday, also raised hopes among West German businessmen for striking new contracts tied to the 1986-90 five-year plan. West Germany is the Soviet Union's largest Western trading partner. The leader of the Soviet delegation, Deputy Prime Minister Alexei K. Antonov, declared that the commission could give "new impulses" to the relations between Bonn and Moscow. He also alluded to the resumption of U.S.-Soviet arms negotiations, urging that the militarization of space be prevented.

Mr. Antonov complained that West Germany's compliance with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's ban on exporting certain high-technology items to Warsaw Pact nations was hindering bilateral trade. This prompted his host, Economics Minister Martin Bangemann, to interject: "It was clear from our talks that in this area, for

The unease in the government has been compounded by nervousness over the impending ceremo-nies in the West and within the Warsaw Pact marking the 40th anniversary of the defeat of Nazi Germany and the end of World War IL As the May anniversary nears, the Kohl government expects a stiffening blast of hostile propaganda from Moscow accusing it of harboring Nazi-like "revanchist" ten-

Ronald Reagan, speaking from his Oval Office, told a cheering crowd of more than 70,000 anti-abortion protesters on Tuesday that "these days, as never before, the momen-tum is with us" to end legalized

But the president, addressing a "March for Life" rally on the 12th anniversary of the Supreme Court decision that women have a constica undergrounds cajuring 400 dizers, Verrender muonal right to abortion, also re-peated his condemnation of the recent rash of attacks on abortion clinics across the United States. "We cannot condone the threatening or taking of human life to protest the taking of life by way of abortion," Mr. Reagan told the protesters who gathered on the Elipse before marching to the U.S. Capitol and the Supreme Court.

Priesth It was the first time that Mr. Reagan has spoken directly to the marchers. In previous years, he has government is met privately with leaders of the anti-abortion movement. the Organic A White House spokesman said freezing and sharp winds, the crowd was the largest ever at the annual rally. It was double last year's total of 35,000, according to U.S. Park Police estimates.

ed in Dia Mr. Reagan, speaking over a telephone-loudspeaker hookup, told the demonstrators, "I am proud to stand with you in the long march for the right to life."

"I am convinced that our response to the 12th anniversary" of the 1973 Supreme Court ruling must be to rededicate ourselves to ending the textible national tragedy of abortion," he said.

"I am convinced that spirit of birth and a recognition of the reality of death by abortion."

"But that spirit of understanding also includes, as all of you know, a complete rejection of violence as a means of settling this issue," Mr. Reagan said.

Abortion clinics in the United States tightened security on Tuesday in response to warnings from the Federal Bureau of Investigation that the anniversary of the abortion ruling could prompt attacks against the facilities.

Since 1982, there have been 30 bombings or arson attacks against family planning and abortion clinics in the United States. Security at the Supreme Court also was extraordinarily heavy.

The organizers of the march are pressing for passage of a "para-mount human life amendment" to the constitution that would bar all abortions, even where the life of the mother was in danger.

"We want the paramount human life amendment' with no com-promise, Mr. President," a leading march organizer told Mr. Reagan over the two-way telephone hook-

"Good for you, and I support you," Mr. Reagan replied. In the past, he has supported a constitutional amendment, but with an exception to allow abortion where the mother's life was in jeopardy. The White House later said that the president did not mean to go beyond his previous position.

U.S. Space Shuttle Begins Countdown For Launch Today on Secret Mission

By John Noble Wilford New York Times Service

CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida Although the countdown has begun for the planned launching on Wednesday of the space shuttle Discovery, the digital countdown clocks at the press site remain dark. It was another reminder that this is to be the first secret military mission in American manned space

The two terse status reports issued on Monday by the National Aeronautics and Space Adminis-tration were scarcely more inforunderstanding begins with a recog-nition of the reality of life before that the countdown was in progress" and "continuing essentially

The countdown was understood to have begun on schedule at 4 A.M. Recent shuttle countdowns, including the one for the Discovery's last flight in November, ran about 54 hours, which would lead to a liftoff on Wednesday morning.

Preparations this time are either more time-consuming, perhaps be-cause of the secret payload, or are being stretched out over a longer period. The air force has annonnced that the Discovery is to be launched between 1:15 P.M. and 4:15 P.M. on Wednesday.

[Temperatures that fell to 19 dewater pipes to freeze and put the shuttle's countdown three hours behind schedule on Tuesday, The Associated Press reported. Officials said that Wednesday's weather forecast called for high temperatures in the mid-50s Fahrenbeit (about 12 degrees centigrade).]

The darkened countdown clocks and the inexactness of the announced liftoff time are part of the Defense Department's efforts to make it difficult for Soviet tracking facilities to follow the mission, at least in its early phases. In addition, the Pentagon is believed to be establishing a precedent for secrecy for all its future shuttle flights. The Discovery's crew arrived at the Kennedy Space Center on Sunday afternoon for final preflight briefings and training. The com-mander is Captain Thomas K. Mattingly of the navy, who flew one of the early shuttle missions. The other crew members, who will be making their first journeys into space, are Lieutenant Colonel Loren J. Shriver, Major Ellison S. Onizuka and Major Gary E. Pay-ton of the air force, and Lieutenant Colonel James F. Buchli of the Ma-

According to widely published accounts, the reason for all the secrecy is that the Discovery will be hauling an electronic intelligencegathering satellite to be placed in orbit within eavesdropping range of the Soviet Union. The satellite is reported to be a more advanced version of the type of Sigint (for signal intelligence) craft that have been used for years in monitoring missile tests and listening in on radio communications.

Since it is known that a powerful upper-stage rocket is attached to the payload, the assumption is that a satellite will be released from the shuttle's cargo bay and then boosted to an orbit 22,300 miles (36,200 kilometers) above the Equator. This is an orbit well within the new rocket's boosting capability and a position preferred for many intellience-gathering satellites.

The mission also represents a crucial test of the air force rocket, which is needed to keep the shuttle program on schedule for the rest of the year. Plans for at least four of the 12 shuttle missions scheduled for this year depend on the successful operation of the satellite-boosting rocket, according to NASA.

The status reports did not give any details of the astronauts' activities. Unlike all previous crews, the shuttle's return to Cane Canaveral grees Fahrenheit (minus 7 degrees astronauts were not permitted to is to be announced about 16 hours centigrade) Monday night caused hold preflight news conferences.

A 'Freeze' Takes Many Forms on Capitol Hill

WASHINGTON - In the White House and on Capitol Hill, "freeze" is a popular term for a budget plan to bring the federal deficit down. But the term is being used in different ways by President Ronald Reagan and Congress.

In his inaugural address on Mon-day, Mr. Reagan said that he would submit a budget "aimed at freezing government program spending for the next year." What he is proposing, administration officials said, is not freezing individual programs but holding overall government spending next year, excluding pay-ment on the national debt, to this year's level of about $820 billion.

Under Mr. Reagan's concept, his military budget would be allowed to increase by about 6 percent after an increase to make up for inflation. To hold overall spending at a stable level, nonmilitary programs would have to be frozen, reduced or

In the House of Representatives, the approach to a freeze has come to mean treating all programs alike, including the military budget. But the Republican leadership in the Senate is retreating from an across-the-board freeze. Robert J. Dole of Kansas, the Senate majority leader, said last week that Republicans would not back a freeze on military appropriations, al-though he added that Mr. Reagan's military spending request would still be trimmed.

Other appropriations in the 1986 fiscal year would be held to 1985 levels, except for benefit programs for the poor. Cost-of-living programs for other pension and benefit programs, perhaps excluding the Social Security program of retirement benefits and disability pay- spending and eliminate some proments, would be eliminated for one

The demonstrations, in bitter cold weather Monday on the steps of the state capitol in St. Paul and at the Board of Trade in the Chicago financial district, were generally peaceful, although a dozen people were arrested here for criminal trespass and disorderly conduct. [Another 20 farmers were arrest-

Fair prices for the farmer is no more than a fair wage for the American worker," said Carlos Welty, an organizer of the Chicago demonstration, which drew 300 farmers from 16 states.

In Minnesota, scores of businesses and more than three dozen school districts closed to support a march on the capitol by 10,000 ru-ral people and their supporters. The demands included an extended moratorium on farm foreclesures, guaranteed operating loans to finance each year's planting and cultivating, and a fair price for agricultural commodities.

"These are just plain old American people going to St. Paul to reclaim social and economic jus-tice," said Bobbi Polzine, one of the organizers for Groundswell, a coalition of groups trying to counter the effect of low prices and high-interest rates in the countryside.

Various studies have indicated The Senate Republican leader-the worst economic impact is on ship still clings to $100 billion as its middle-size farms, those of a few the worst economic impact is on hundred acres. We must find the solution that will save the family farm," said Glen Anderson, a Minnesota state representative who offered a package of relief measures to the legislature. They included $225 million in property tax relief and elimination of sales tax on agricultural parts

The farmers maintain that speculative trading in quantities far larger than what is actually produced artificially depresses crop prices below the cost of production.

Thomas P. Cunningham, the board president, said his organiza-tion was merely a marketplace for the laws of supply and demand.
"We are not the cause of the problem," Mr. Cunningham said. He blamed instead crop surpluses, high-interest rates and the strength of the dollar, which makes U.S. agricultural exports more expensive abroad.

Decade of Decline for Labor Groups

In the Netherlands, for example, the unions tried everything they knew — strikes, working to rule and mass demonstrations - to prevent a 3-percent pay out for government workers and a 5-percent cut in general welfare benefits. The government of Prime Minister Rund Lubbers refused to budge and after six weeks was victorious. In Britain, the picket-line vio-lence that has marred the miners' strike has murt not only the miners' own cause but also the cause of nmions in general and that of their political arm, the Labor Party. It was a public workers' strike, with piles of garbage in the street the mother. Judge Richard Gadbois Jr. of the U.S. District Court in Los Angeles sentenced Rienk Kamer, 41, to 16 months in prison Monday, but gave him credit for 15 months served. Mr. Kamer also was ordered held until he is deported Feb. 11 to the Netherlands, where he faces additional criminal charges.

66, was sentenced to six months in a community care facility. Mr. Whitney suffers from numerous debilitating illnesses, and Judge Gadbois said he believed that sending him to prison would amount to a death sentence.

Among prominent European British work force by "re-creating great impact on the course of politicians, only Tony Benn, the political trade unionism" of a militant sort that ultimately will drive the moderates to the wall.

"No social change ever begins at the top," Mr. Benn said. "This just war of the miners is radicalizing the labor movement from underneath, through a level of political education we haven't seen in this country in a couple of generations. People will go to their graves 50 years from now with political perspectives shaped in 1984." Many others involved with unions, however, say they think the weakness of unions poses problems for society as a whole. That view is particularly prevalent in Latin

"There is a very grave danger, frauds in history is to be deported. and it is a danger not just for unions but for governments and enterprises and others, for everyone," said Mr. Spinetta, a top civil servant in France's Labor Ministry. "Part of the role of a union is to channel and give coherent form to the needs and wants of workers and employees. If these things are not canalized, there can be serious explosions."

> Such fears, according to Daniel Singer, a journalist who writes of-ten about French unions, stem from 1968. At that time, he said, "everyone was saying that trade unions were useless, and then the kids exploded in spontaneous strikes and showed that something

"I personally don't think it will happen again," he said, "not under a left-wing government. But had the right still been in power and laid off as many workers and cut unemployment pay as Mitterrand has done, there would have been a social upheaval, of that I am absolutely sure."

already have reached a critical stage. "Even if the boat started ar-lished last year in northern Inhambane, where people are receiving far less than the minimum daily food ration of 400 grams (14 ounces) and many days are receiving no ration at all. Because they also are not receiving seeds, some are setting aside their food ration for planting.

"People here have stopped dying, but they still have very serious malnutrition," said Igor Vaz, a doc-tor at the Pambara relief center. 'Most of the children have some brain damage because they have gone too long with malnutrition."

Adequate distribution of supplies is prevented by overwhelming transportation problems. Mozambique winds along 1,500 miles (2,424 kilometers) of Indian Ocean coast. Only one paved road con-nects much of the country's regions, and it is under almost constant attack by rebels. Roads leading inland generally are single lane, pothole-covered dirt tracks.

As a result, food and other supplies in surplus in some parts of Mozambique cannot be moved to others. There are 5,000 to 6,000 tons of potentially life-saving salt crammed into warehouses in Nova Mambone in northern Inhamabane, according to Jossias Joaquin Nhate, provincial director of internal commerce. But it cannot be shipped elsewhere in the province for lack of ships and trucks. "The warehouse is full, but people are dying for lack of salt," he

Similarly, thousands of tons of harvested mangoes lie rotting in the sun in Gaza for lack of transport, according to Arne Disch, program officer for the UN development program in Maputo.

Where transportation is avail-able, it is often of the wrong type to meet the particular needs of Mozambique's interior. The 31 trucks registered with the government in Inhambane all weigh at least 15 tons, far too big to haul food along the winding dirt roads there.

But it is here, in northeastern banned because of leftist activities Brazil - the setting for his affectionate satires about prostitutes, politicians, scoundrels, street philosophers - that the myth of Jorge Amado is strongest, and perpetuated by the world he re-creates.

At his rambling home, surrounded by hundreds of pieces of folk art, he conducts his life with the benevolence and paternalism expected here of someone with wealth, power or fame. He receives constant requests to donate money, serve as witness at a marriage, be godfather to a child. Journalists solicit political comments from him. A constant procession of visitors passes through his house.

Amado, a round, white-haired man with eyes that go from melan-choly to droll, said these visitors and his participation in provincial town life were essential to his work. "I nourish myself with this," he said. "I need contact with people -

His wife, Zelia Gattai, recalled spiritist cult widely popular in Bra-zil. They had come to tell him that the spirits had chosen him as a patron for an initiation ceremony. This meant he had to pay for the ceremonial clothes and festivities, said Gattai.)

Later, carrying a copy of Tocaia Grande," a priest came to ask for at age 72, he is at the top of his an autograph, then knelt in front of the author and kissed his hand. By lunchtime, the neighborhood tinker had brought a large lizard, the kind Amado likes to eat.

"As a writer, I am a product of my links with the people of Bahia," said Amado, referring to the state where his writing is set. "I need to see how they think and feel. Without this I could have no intimacy with my characters."
But Amado and Gattai — who types her husband's manuscripts and has just published her third book of anecdotes about their life -have also become hostages to the world they created, and have to flee it when they want to work.

the latest book - his 22d novel, tracing the birth of a town, starting when henchmen of a cacao plantation ambush a group of settlers took three years to write in four different residences.

Friends said that, above all, the author wanted with this book to defy critics who have claimed that he has become repetitive in his erotic themes and has commercialized his art. "This book was difficult for Jorge," said one friend, his publisher, Alfredo Machado. "He becomes more anxious every time because he has to outdo himself. He took this book as a challenge to show that, after 50 years of writing

The first printing of 150,000 copies of "Tocaia Grande," which came out last month, was sold out within two weeks.

Amado cited several difficulties with the book. "I had already done four novels about the cacao region," he said, "so everything had to be seen from a different perspective. And there is no central character but dozens of stories, individual stories, which, little by little, be-come a collective story and turn into a community. I had a lot of trouble conceptualizing it."

He confirmed that he rarely prepares outlines for his works. "I'm incapable of making a plan," he "We live like gypsies," she said. said. "I know people who construct books beforehand, but I never know what will happen. My stories are constructed by the characters that take me along

The British theater's obsession with turning novels into plays continues, with Shared Experi-ence's production of Samuel Richardson's 18thcentury classic, "Pamela," on view this week in Winchester and returning to London in April. The book is a four-volume epic consisting largely of a servant's letters home about her master's attempts to exercise his droit du seigneur. But the their mere presence force the next adaptors, Giles Havergal and Fidelis Morgan, person to shift out of their ghetto, have solved the inherent problems by presenting "Pamela" as a rehearsal-room run-through.

It works superbly simply because it sets Richardson's story in a modern context. Half the time we are reminded of the author's implicit feminism and his realization that a woman is more than a piece of disposable property; for the other half we recognize how far we have traveled from the chanvinism of the 1740s, when it was thought improper for a mother to nurse her own child.

Since then, the play has rarely been seen (it did not get a West End production until 1936).

What emerges now is Rarker's rare ability to combine public theme and private issues—in particular, his obsessive concern with the emoparticular, his obsessive concern with the emo- the text. There is sterling support from Tony enthusiasm.

Realizing that records were a lot cheaper to make than films, he set out to objectify an elusive sound in his head - Latin percussion with rock and jazz elements - with a childhood friend, Jerry Gonzalez. 1984 was a year of exceptional growth and development for the International Herald Tribune. This report is written to share some highlights of that year with our readers and advertisers, in a spirit of deep appreciation for your interest and support.

The most important fact about the IHT in 1984 was that circulation continued to grow at a remarkable rate - the most encouraging growth, in fact, in our history. In the course of the year, daily circulation surged past 170,000 copies per day (distributed in 164 countries) and the average daily sale surpassed 160,000 copies. Circulation in Asia — where we began printing just four years ago - now exceeds 25,000 copies daily.

Overall, the paper's circulation has grown by 6 percent in the past year and by more than 20 percent since 1980. Some 60 airlines now buy more than 35,000 copies every day, evidence of the paper's continuing importance to the global business traveler.

Meanwhile, our regular subscribers continued to renew their subscriptions at a rate exceeding 80 percent, a vote of confidence for which we are most grateful.

New research concerning our readers shows them to be affluent ($79,400 average family income), educated (88 percent hold at least one university degree) and influential (72 percent hold management positions). This research was based on a reader questionnaire printed in the newspaper and tabulated by an independent research company. We were encouraged when nearly 12,000 readers returned their questionnaires, providing an unusually broad sample of our daily audience.

Advertising aimed at this important audience has also been climbing, with 1984 sales increasing by 23 percent over 1983. Once again, this was the best growth in many years.

As readers have undoubtedly noticed, there was a marked increase in the use of four-color and spot-color advertising in the IHT in 1984—by more than 75 percent over 1983. Classified advertising, where advertisers depend on fast results, also increased significantly.

We believe this growth in readership and in advertising support ultimately reflects our progress in two other areas: our editors' efforts to produce an increasingly valuable newspaper, and the efforts of our circulation and production team to make that paper available to readers in more places on a more timely basis.

Concerning the newspaper itself, an ex-panded team of editors and writers has helped us not only to increase the scope of our coverage but also to preserve and advance the IHT's reputation for accurate and balanced

One of the biggest editorial expansions in 1984 was the new "Personal Investing" section, now appearing on the second Monday of each month and designed to help our read-ers look beyond national boundaries as they make their savings and investment decisions.

Other editorial advances ranged from regular new columns on "International Management" and "The European Economic Community" to a substantial increase in our listings of international sports results. A new "American Topics" column, appearing on Mondays and Saturdays, provides a fuller sense of American society. The winter and summer Olympics and the American political campaign were topics for expanded news coverage, and once again this year our editors produced more than 60 special reports on a wide range of countries and industries.

On the delivery front, the IHT's technological expansion continued with the start-up of our seventh facsimile printing site in May, this one in Marseille. International Herald Tribune copies now reach the South of France and Spain earlier than ever as a result. To mention one example, the IHT's arrival time in Madrid is now 8:30 A.M. (coming from Marseille by truck and then plane) compared to 12:30 P.M. when the paper was flown from Paris. Further new printing sites are under consideration.

Other IHT activities in 1984 included five well-attended conferences, with speakers ranging from U.S. Vice President George Bush to Portuguese Prime Minister Mario Soares. And new guides to European travel and Paris food joined the growing IHT book list.

On all these fronts and others, we hope to make further advances in the year ahead. But that will require your continued help. Your decisions — to read this newspaper and to place your advertising in its pages - ultimately determine the pace of our advance. That is why it is so important for us to feel in touch with you, sharing information about the newspaper with you, and learning from you about your reactions and interests. So keep in touch - you can be sure that your letters to us are carefully read and noted.

With thanks again and very best wishes, Lee W. Huebner

And Now Back to Work

Another Colonial Puzzle

Other Opinion

A general atmosphere of peace, prosperity and pride applies mainly to affluent America. There is little feeling of well-being, for instance, among the 20,000 homeless condedinto New York shelters. Yet the national spirit represents a substantial achievement. President Reagan was right on Monday to recall the "economic stress" when he took office, and he is entitled to his oratory about golden years and America reaching for her best. Restoring a spirit of national pride is an achievement that was rewarded with overwhelming re-election.

That re-election itself further explains the national mood. Not in 25 years has a president finished two terms. The promise of continuity means that the public can rock along comfortably without having to think much about Washington; familiarity can breed contentment. But now the election has finally ended, Mr. Reagan's victory has been certified in ceremony and it is time to get back to work. What does the president want to do? He says he wants to do something about two goals, deficit and defense. Or does he? What he says about those goals clanks with contradictions. After 50 years of deficit spending, it is time somebody did something, the president asserts manfully. "If not us, who?" If not us, who WHAT? Ronald Reagan is borrowing three times as much a year as Jimmy Carter ever did. By the end of his term he will have borrowed more than all previous presidents combined. On his record, the only thing Mr. Reagan appears to mean is: "If I don't stop borrowing at this rate, well, that will be the next president's problem."

Then he proclaims with a straight, even stern face: "Let us make it unconstitutional for the federal government to spend more than it takes in." Mr. Reagan says that knowing that he is having trouble cutting $50 billion out of his new budget, and that even if he succeeds he will still be spending $170 billion more than he takes in. Further, although he has for years been calling for a balanced-budget amendment, he has yet to propose one to Congress.

He is just as full of contradiction about defense. He complains of bloated government, yet the essence of his muscular diplomacy is a bloated Pentagon. He thinks America's de-fenses are sufficiently repaired to warrant a new start in arms control, yet he continues to discredit mutual assured destruction, the only effective deterrence in sight, as ineffective, even immoral. He spent paragraphs of his second inaugural address promoting a science-fiction notion of nuclear defense. Pushing that idea now, 30 or more years ahead of its time, is the surest way to aggravate the arms race in offensive weapons. Perhaps Mr. Reagan does not understand this paradox and is merely driven by those around him who oppose all arms restraints. Perhaps he understands it very well and thinks of diplomacy only as a sop to doves while the arms race continues. In any case, by failing to use such occasions to pro-claim realizable objectives, he remains strategically uninspiring and, worse, unclear.

If Mr. Reagan is serious about hating to spend borrowed money, then he has to stop spending so much of it for the Pentagon. If he serious about not wanting to spend more than he takes in and cannot cut spending enough, then he has to take in more, in taxes. If he is serious about arms control, then he has to give the White House or the State Department the authority to squelch its opponents at the Pentagon and the Arms Control Agency. The president has earned his second term.

He can now ride his mandate. The question is, in which direction? As Matthew Arnold once said about freedom, it is a good horse - but it is a horse to ride somewhere.

Failure Again at Cyprus Talks

In the approach to the meeting between Greek and Turkish Cypriot leaders which broke up in acrimony in New York on Sunday, the UN Secretariat took the risk of allowing, if not encouraging, a crucial ambiguity about the nature of the "documentation" on which the meeting was based. The Turks described it as a "draft agreement," while the Greeks saw it only as "a basis for negotiations." Mr. Denk-tash has now gone home claiming to have withdrawn all his concessions, apparently in the hope that international opinion will no longer blame him or his Turkish protectors for the lack of a solution. But, whatever the in-felicities of Mr. Kyprianou's negotiating style, that is hoping too much. The crucial issue remains whether Turkey is willing to withdraw ber troops. Had there been a real negotiation,

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, now passing its midpoint, is notable for its antipathy to broad federal authority in all matters but national defense. The prospect of eight years of continuing attack on Washington's regulatory and welfare functions raises some serious potential problems.

But what has been the good of all the federal programs? Can one say that economic democracy has been advanced when wealth distribution, measured in quintiles, is nearly the same now as it was in 1800? Are the poor not still with us? Are not the escendants of slaves still disproportionately represented among them? Is not a woman's wage, for equivalent work, still a fraction of a man's?

These are not easy questions, but a number of political scientists and economists have been actively furnishing answers. As regards political democracy, the rise in raw numbers of voters offsets the lagging percent-ages to some degree. And as ways are developed to measure participation outside the voting booth it becomes apparent that the American citizen is relatively and increasingly active. Compared with his foreign counterparts he feels himself a part of the process; compared with his ancestors he is developing more effective ways to bring political attention to neglected groups and problems. As far as economic payoff is con-cerned, several important conditions lie just beneath the troubling surface. from static. And since the nation has absorbed millions of new citizens most of them poor —some argue that it is a positive achievement simply to have kept inequality from rising. Further, inequality of income is far less than inequality of wealth.

A more profound question has to do with the proper economic responsibilities of political democracy. Only a very few ever believed that universal suffrage would lead to equality of wealth. So long as there is no preventable malnutrition or widespread pov-erty, who cares how many museums J. Paul Getty has? From this point of view the system has come closer to success. Poverty has not been eliminated but, recent studies indicate, there are fewer pockets of "hard core" poor than had been expected. Aid in kind has reduced the more pathetic consequences of being poor.

Having ended slavery and extended suffrage to women, has the federal government been able to advance social justice for blacks, women and other groups perceived as disadvantaged? The answer begins with the recognition of an enormous shift in attitude. Early in their history Americans assumed that the only way to help those special groups was by providing a separate setting; an asylum, a reservation, a technical school. For a century social progress was measured by the quality of those facilities. Then the goal shifted from separates a separate of the separate of rate-but-equal to "mainstreaming." The quest for integrated equality is relatively recent. No, the government has not brought social justice for all. Much progress has been made, astonishing progress in some cases, as in the earning power of black women. One could argue about how much of the progress is due to federal initiative. but there is no doubt that most of these advances have rested on actions by the executive, the Supreme Court and Congress. Were this activity discontinued it would be sorely missed. Implicitly a whole spectrum of is-sues is dismissed by ascription to a lunatic fringe of "reformers" who are presumed to have no connection with the "real world." This image is undeserved. Reformers are not extremists. They are middle-class and well educated. The professions have been well represented among them; they have included business leaders and government employees.

Such people have neither decreased in number over the years nor moved from the center. Nowadays they are probably more apt to express through joining a protest march, but they are committed and persistent. They have been described as the "extreme middle," which means fiscally conservative and socially liberal. Compared to the population at large they are better educated and more urban, coastal, female and Jewish. Their agenda for the '80s stresses civil rights for blacks; civil liberties for minorities; improved female standing in the labor force; abortion; nuclear nonproliferation; conservation; population control: government accountability and effectiveness. There are more than 4 million of these reformers and they donate, annually, nearly $100 million in support of these causes. These people are not victims; they are not cynical; they are not living in an unreal world. They are not anti-business; they come largely from management. They believe in social change as a process in which the federal government must play an essential part. The causes they espouse eventually win.

This segment of the population is delighted with the studies, now emerging, that show the success of many of the Johnson administration social programs — while they lasted.

By Robert H. Walker under the present leadership the This is the second of two articles. American people have a chance to make some big mistakes. They must realize that the great importance of social change is in its the notion that only a program of social justice can underwrite an agcontinuity and not in its success or failure in reaching fixed objectives. And they must realize that the govgressive and inventive economy.

WASHINGTON — There was the products and services of multino great debate in 1984 be- national corporate America. tween a conservative president and his liberal challenger. By November Mr. Reagan was pledging to light for arms control and against cuts in So-cial Security, and Walter Mondale was arguing for more defense and prudent budgeting. That consensus has set the stage for critical disagreement in 1985. Questions include:

1) Who pays? The size of government — which means the amount of amount of collective energy to end slavery and mitigate poverty. If we are quicker to make heroes of Andrew Carnegie and Lee Iacocca than of such social reformers as Jane Addams and Edward Bellamy, at least we show an active conscience regard-federal taxes — seems to have been determined for a time. Mr. Reagan has given up claims of reducing its size and is trying only to reduce its rate of growth. So who pays the 20 to percent of GNP that will be going Washington each year?

The key to any tax reform will be the method and total of taxation of the great middle class. Liberals will try to push as much of the tax burden as possible on the rich and corporations without taking so much that insufficient capital remains to underwrite future economic expansion. Conservatives will try to push as much as possible the other way, onto the middle class, but will have to be careful that the squeeze is not so tight that the middle millions do not have enough expendable income to pay for world war? After World War II it adopted a "21/2 war" (conventional weapons) defense strategy, trying to maintain the ability to light major wars in Europe and Asia and a small war elsewhere. After Vietnam came a "1½ war" strategy, under the as-sumption that if the United States and the Soviet Union were fighting on two continents, the conflict would inevitably become nuclear - and men and tanks and ships would be-come irrelevant. Then the Reagan administration began trying to fund a "31/2 war" strategy. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has testified: Our long-term goal is to be able to meet the demands of worldwide war, including concurrent reinforcement of Europe, deployment to Southwest Asia and the Pacific and support for other areas ...

3) Can a Pax Americana be imposed? The next step in Reagan-Weinberger thinking is to try to change the strategic balance back to its post-World War II state when America dominated the world. The trillion-dollar dream is for a breakthrough in space weapons and defense: "star wars." Will it work? Can America afford it? Could the Soviets match it? What would they do if they realized they could not? The answers must begin coming in 1985.

4) Are we really our brothers' keepers? The debate over welfare programs for the poor - not Social Security and middle-class programs — will get down to basics this year. Basically, conservatives are arguing that nothing can be done about most poverty, especially multigenerational black poverty. The logical consequence of that argument is that all the country can do is to try to maintain a growing economy for most of the nation — some of the poor have to benefit - and then combine enough social welfare and police power to maintain tolerable public safety from angry or criminal people of poverty. PARIS — In the middle of a speech on the frustrations of A a speech on the inistrations of development, an African official paused to ask: "Who started this Third World rating anyway — first, second, third? Why?"

The occasion was a recent conference of the African-American Institute in Gabon. The remark reflected. how much perceptions have changed in little over a generation.

The idea of a "Third World" did not start out as meaning a lower place. on the totem pole. It was generated at the 1955 Bandung conference, which President Sukarno of Indonesia described as "the first intercontinental conference of the so-called colored peoples in the history of mankind." The purpose was to reject the polarization of the world into blocs led by the United States and the Soviet Union, to map a third way and to spur decolonization. That purpose was reinforced at the 1961 non-aligned summit conference in Belgrade, a gathering of 25 legendary leaders that included Yugoslavia's Tito. Indonesia's Sukarno, India's Nehru, Egypt's Nasser, Ghana's Nkrumah, Ethiopia's Haile Selassie and Cyprus's Archbishop Makarios. Now the nonaligned movement in-cludes well over 100 countries. Some such as Vietnam, Cambodia and Cuba, are quite clearly aligned.

Classical imperialism, the colonization of territories subjecting indige. nous peoples to foreign rule, has almost disappeared. But the vocabulary remains, still passionate although fuzzy. With the exception of the once-proud Third World label, it could be said that whatever has been achieved or has failed in the oftdemanded transfer of technology and resources, the one transfer that has taken hold is that of vocabulary.

Most of it, even the Marxist catch-words of class, exploitation and neo-colonialism, originated in the indus-trialized West. So did the catchwords of sovereignty, independence de-mocracy, individual rights and national dignity. All have meaning, but not the same meaning for everybody. So there is something skewed in a debate that uses big words to describe the grievances of societies grappling with the terrible problems of entering the modern world against societies that have defined - and not only for themselves — what "modern" means. It leads to a debilitating hypocrisy, on both sides. Hypocrisy is not all bad. It is a tacit acceptance of stan-dards, even if they are only goals, very far from achievement. But it is an unitant and an obstacle to practical pursuit of what is possible.

One aspect to which I am continually exposed by profession is the complaint about the deforming, antisocial impact of the media. "Haven't." you distorted the image of Africa?" asks a Gabonese official who spent ational corporate America. years working in European television.

The onslaught makes me defensive. I cannot belp reminding the official from Chad that flattering reportsthat would mislead investors would make Western information services useless, even for his country's purposes. The real reason for the dominance of Western media is that, for all their faults, they are more credible. People do not believe their own palaver, let alone that of their leaders, their neighbors or rivals' leaders.

The best way for African and other developing countries to induce a more accurate, balanced flow of information to the West would be to develop their own press so that it. provides a reasonably reliable base.

The arguments offered for why that is not possible stress inexperi-ence, lack of technology, cultural habits and especially the weakness of new nations trying to mold coherence out of deep ethnic hostilities. This, I was told, is why one-party states and dictatorships cannot be avoided... The alternative would not be political pluralism but tribal war.

All that is probably true. But itamounts to a plea for a double standard, a hidden self-disdain wrapped in an alien vocabulary that is divorced from local reality.

The antidote came from an American engineer, a man who has spent his life building big, solid things in improbable places. He is working on a Gabonese railroad and pretends he is a mercenary, not concerned with big ideas and big words. But he is. making something real, in a real for-est, with real people, to create real wealth. "Third World" began as an assertive political slogan, Now it is a sense of having been left behind. FROM OUR JAN. 23 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO 1910: Turks Want Powerful Navy

PARIS - Hilmy Pasha, recently Grand Vizier of Turkey, who is in Paris, received a Herald correspondent [on Jan. 22]. Questioned as to the programme of the [Young Turk] Committee of Union and Progress, Hilmy Pasha said that his successor, Hakki Bey, intends to follow the lines laid down by himself and that they are both working for the advancement of the empire. He said: "Turkey at the present moment is in a better position, both financially and commercially, than ever she was before. It is important that we should now build a powerful navy, not only in the interests of Turkey, but also for Greece, for on the unity of Turkey and Greece depends the maintenance of the Ottoman Empire. They must stand together; there must be no friction of any kind."

1935: Nomads Blamed for Massacre

PARIS - Following the news that a French official, sixteen native militiamen who were accompanying him and eighty Issas tribesmen had been massacred in French Somaliland by Abyssinian raiders, it was learned that the attackers were members of the Assai-Maras tribe, a clan of nomads who often attack both French and Abyssinians and who are beyond the control of Emperor Haile Selassie I. As a consequence, there is no likelihood of the affair developing into an international incident. The massacre took place at Marheito, where Albert Bernard, French deputy colonial administrator, was surprised by 800 Assai-Maras tribesmen on Jan. 17 while hurrying to Dikkil, where the raiders were reported to be burning villages and killing French citizens.

WASHINGTON — The elec-tion on Jan. 15 of Tancredo Neves as the next president of Bra-zil was an ironic compromise choice, the product of a year of political confusion. It was less than many Brazilians wanted but per-haps a good deal better than most had expected. It is above all a substantial victory for the democratic process in the world's fifth-largest country, and Mr. Neves should get whatever support he needs abroad.

The confusion was created by the military regime as it relinquished the power it had seized in 1964. In an effort to control the succession, it created an electoral college to ratify a candidate to be selected by incumbent President João Baptista Figueiredo. The problem was that the government was unable to out-maneuver Paulo Salim Maluf, the former governor of Sao Paulo, when he emerged as front-runner among the electors from the ruling party. In the end the regime reluctantly embraced him, creating a se-rious split in government ranks.

Meanwhile the opposition launched a nationwide campaign to force the government to abandon the electoral college and re-establish direct elections. When this effort failed, the opposition and dissidents from within the ruling party sought common cause. Governor Neves of Minas Gerais emerged as the consensus candidate.

Suddenly one of Brazil's most cautious politicians, a 74-year-old warhorse who had avoided seeking By Riordan Roett beat. Drawing his running mate from the dissident wing of the gov-ernment party, Mr. Neves orga-nized a broad political coalition and easily defeated Mr. Maluf. In fact his victory may turn out to be just what the country needs. The president-elect is profoundly democratic, a born conciliator, giv-en to caution and pragmatism. As a compromise candidate he also has a good chance of getting along with the military, which has wisely recognized his popularity and guaranteed his inauguration on March 15. His government will oversee the rewriting of the constitution and a reorganization of the party system. It will prepare for direct presiden-tial elections. It will seek, then, to consolidate democratic procedu after more than two decades of authoritarian military rule. That is easier said than done, Mr.

Neves takes office after three years of austerity and recession. Real wages have plummeted. Unemployment is at an all-time high. Malnutrition is widespread and infant mortality is rising. The distribution of income is becoming increasingly uneven, and the social agenda, long overlooked, is a first priority.

Meeting the expectations of Brazil's 130 million people will not be easy. Resources are scarce. In addition to the $100-billion foreign debt owed to private commercial banks. Brazil has a heavy burden of interinflation to pass 250 percent in 1985. Mr. Neves confronts a classic challenge - how to meet social expectations with limited resources. while consolidating democracy.

The United States has an important role to play. Last year it accounted for nearly a third of Bra-zil's total exports of $27 billion. Brazil's overall trade surplus of $13 billion helped enormously in its effort to restore its creditworthiness with the international financial community, and the country will need to repeat that performance in 1985. The United States and its industrial allies can best help by buying Brazilian exports and resisting protectionism at home.

At the same time, the private commerical banks, in rescheduling the external debt, should give Brazil terms at least as reasonable as those granted to Mexico and Venezuela last year. Only in that way can they begin to depoliticize the debt issue in a country where many politicians champion a radical refusal to pay. The industrial countries must be aware that it is in their interests to see democratic government work in Brazil. Mr. Neves's visit to Washington, scheduled for early February, will provide an excellent op-portunity for the United States to publicly recognize the challenge he faces and offer its strong support.

Achievements in Europe

Regarding the opinion column "Eu-rope's Decline: What Illness, What Cure?" (Jan. 4) by Giles Merritt:

Tales of woe about Europe continue to fill your pages. The theme re-mains constant: Europe has high unemployment and a lagging economy when compared with the vigorously growing Pacific Basin countries and with the United States. This is the view of someone who sees a glass as half empty. But those of us who like to regard it as half full and who are familiar with the situation on both sides of the ocean have an entirely different view about Europe. Europe has been rebuilt since 1945.

Thriving tourism, delightful central cities, a vigorous and changing educational system and an excellent infrastructure have arisen from the rubble and misery of World War II.

grant labor and refugees from alien cultures and religions. Europe has, not experienced the race riots of Watts, the civil war of Korea or the terrorism of the Middle East.

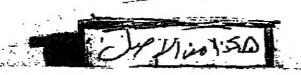

Despite language differences, cen-turies of hate and strife and clashing nationalistic interests, Europe knows friendship, social commitment to underdeveloped countries, excellent social care for its sick and aged and a. high level of tolerance.

At what social cost have the Pacific Basin countries forged ahead? Who takes care of the environment, the aged, the ill, the hungry and the jobless in Brazil? How many homeless wander the streets of New York? Let's take a balanced look at the glass: It is half filled in Europe, and we will fill it even further.

The Press and the U.S. Army: A Story of Distrust in an Uncensored War.

By Eleanor Randolph Washington Past Service

EW YORK — For journalists, the case of Westmoreland vs. CBS Inc. has provided a documentary windfall, a rain of papers that give a glimpse of something many of them suspected 17 years ago, but never saw The But the Bu

Within the thousands of cables and memos and letters that have been declassified - their "secret" or "eyes only" designations scratched out to bring them into the light of public scrutiny for the first time - reside the details of how U.S. military and government officials tried in 1967 to fool the American press, to hide data about the size of the enemy forces in Victnam. It is a story about how the military distrusted the media, an uncensored cluster of more than 300 accredited journalists.

But it also is a story that helps explain why many in the media distrusted the military. The paper trail documents how much time, effort and concern was used by the men running the war and the government to make certain that the press did not get the idea that enemy forces in South Vietnam were growing at a time when the official line was that they were shrinking.

And the reason that the story is so easily available in the U.S. District Court in lower Manhattan is that it is not technically a part of the CBS trial. Almost three years ago, when CBS Reports aired the broadcast that is at issue in General William C. Westmoreland's $120-million libel action, the network accused the general and his assistants of trying to deceive the American public, Congress and the president.

But when the case came to trial almost three months ago, General Westmoreland's lawyer, Dan M. Burt, made it clear that he would only concentrate on disproving one issue — the CBS allegation that the general tried to deceive the president at the end of the trial with their duty in this did not trust what the reporters were writing and the names of the 32 people are given. And troops were doing better than thought.

Denver Chronicle, or whatever it is, inheled me data that had come from U.S. intelligence in in stating that I arranged for the killing of Joe Jones. . . . It seems to me the judge would have to say to the jury something along the lines . . . [that] you could not find for the plaintiff unless you found that, given the complete propriety of their stating that he killed 32 people, that he was injured in his reputation by the further statement that not only did he kill 32, but he killed are the capital of South Vietnam. At that so, the capital of South Vietnam. At that so, wheeler put it: "If these figures should reach the public domain, they would, literally, blow the lid off of Washington. Please do whatever is necessary to insure these figures are not, repeat not, released to news media or otherwise exposed to public knowledge."

As a result, some of the most fascinating documents put into the public record by this trial are about an uncontested issue - the military leaders' sensitivity about the press and their fear that the media would distort their view of the war.

The concern about the press is not something that a warrior wants to worry about, as General Westmoreland made clear both then and now. His concerns are with troop deployments and

'N his book, "A Soldier Reports," published in 1976, he reminds readers of what other soldiers have said or done about the press. Napoleon said, "Three hostile newspapers are reaposeum said, "Inree nostife newspapers are more to be feared than 1,000 bayonets." William Tecumseh Sherman, the Civil War general who tried to hang a reporter for espionage, complained about journalists who "have the impudence of Satan" when they "poke about among the lazy and pick up rumors and publish them as facis." them as facts.

But what if, as it turned out frequently during the Vietnam War, the military leaders thought we were winning and a lot of their men thought we were not? Who gets to tell their version of the truth, or more precisely, whose truth goes to the

Thus, what began to warned Mr. Burt at the time that it might happen in Vietnam was that reporters did not look a little odd when he charged the jury take the generals at their word and the generals

Johnson about the enemy troop levels. He concluded that "the effect of surfacing this major and significant discrepancy would be dynamite." In the following months, a similar discrepancy arose, one between the Central Intelligence Agency and General Westmoreland's command over whether enemy strength levels were higher than they had once thought. It became clear both to the military men and to the intelligence contingent in Vietnam and Washington that they were going to have to work out a comprobetween General Westmordand's command view that the enemy troops were leveling off at 300,000 and the CIA's view that the number ranged from 420,000 to 600,000.

The argument between the CIA and the army had increased by August 1967. But throughout the debate over the numbers runs a fairly consistent thread of concern about what would happen if the press heard about the higher figures.

A day later, General Westmoreland's deputy, General Creighton W. Abrams, expressed the concern to his superiors of the possible press reaction on the issue of the military-CIA debate on figures. He said: The press reaction to these inflated figures is of much greater concern. We have been projecting an image of success over the recent months, and properly so. "Now, when we release the figure of 420-431,000, the newsmen will immediately seize on the point that the enemy force has increased about 120-130,000. All available caveats and explanations will not prevent the press from drawing an erroneous and gloomy conclusion as to the meaning of the increase. All those who have an incorrect view of the war will be reinforced and the task will become more difficult."

N Aug. 29, 1967, the late Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker in Saigon cabled an "eyes only" message to President Johnson's assistant, Walt W. Rostow: "I need hardly mention the devastating impact if it should leak out (as these things so often do) that despite all our success in grinding down VCNVA here, CIA figures are used to show that they are really much stronger than ever. Despite all caveats, this is inevitable conclusion which most of press would reach." VCNVA stands for the Viet Cong

Mr. Carver, whose telegrams are among the most florid of those from this period, said that Mr. Komer was adamant "in insisting that there must not be any quantification of the irregular forces on the ground that the press would add all figures together and, hence, quantifying the irregulars would produce a politically unacceptable total over 420,000."

In a little more than a week, officials began listing of military strength, had harder data on, the "fighters" and had dropped the political workers, the women, old men and boys from the in the CBS case, the fear of the press list of the enemy because they were "nonfighters." They said in essence that the number of fighters had declined from 285,000 to 242,000, not including political operatives.

ANY reporters who used the figures stuck to the line. In fact, among the few who appeared to go beyond it were The New Republic and The New York Times, both of which finally made a stab at tallying up the totals in December 1967. The New Republic suggested the enemy probably numbered 400,000. The New York Times, in a Dec. 20 article by Hedrick Smith, used the figure of 418,000 to 433,000.

But most reporters either shrugged off the numbers, deciding that the latest quantification confidential "eyes only" cable to Mr. Rostow, announcing an agreement among the various intelligence officers. # World Bank School Trains Managers of Third World

By Clyde H. Farnsworth New York Times Service

Washington's more unusual schools has just ended.

Soulmi El Abed Alami, a senior Moroccan civil servant, was among the latest "fellows" in the exclusive school. It refuses to call its students students, gives no examinations, identifies professors as "seminar directors" and provides each "fellow" with an efficiency

Mr. Alami never learned the words to the school song (his languages are French and Arabic), wears no school tie (because there is none), plays no football (his game is soccer) but says he is returning to Rabat better trained in the arts of development.

This unconventional school is the World Bank's Economic Development Institute. Its alumni include Liberia's minister of health and social welfare, Sudan's state minister for energy and mining, Zimbabwe's permanent secretary in the ministry of finance and coonomic planning and half the cabinet of South

The courses run through the Christmas week because most of the fellows come from non-Christian countries: the 100 Third World countries that borrow money regularly from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

The Economic Development Institute is one of several Washington bodies that are barrely noticed in the political dynamics of the city but are of great consequence to the outside world. Engene R. Black, a former president of the World Bank, recalled an experience at Seoul's airport some years ago that illustrates the phenomenon. It was under his presidency, back in 1955, that the school was started. His remembrance came in a speech in

Korean officials had sought to impress on him the importance of the institute to their

"As I got out of the plane there was a great big banner with EDI on it and a band," Mr. Black said. "I was told that every Korean who had ever been to EDI was there. I had no idea there were so many of them. They seemed to be all over the government."

N engineer and agronomist, Mr. Alami is one of the directors of a huge irrigation project in northwestern Morocco. After the five-week course that ended last month, he says he knows "much more about financial management" and is able to integrate it with his technical skills.

With 18 other Moroccan bureaucrats who were his fellow "fellows," he also visited Clyde's restaurant in Georgetown, the White House, the Capitol and other attractions of Washington, spent weekends in the Virginia countryside. He also took a side trip to New York, where he met commercial bankers in-terested in Moroccan development, including Citibank's retired chief executive, Walter E.

"New York City is very dynamic," observed another of the Moroccan participants, Abdelaziz Chagou, a senior official in the Ministry of Finance. "It's America's Casablanca. Washington is very nice, but duller, more like Rabat."

Mr. Alai and Mr. Chagou are among the 20,000 Third World functionaries who have passed through the portals of the institute in its nearly 30 years of operations. Christopher R. Willoughby, an Oxford-educated British economist who is director of the school, says that last year it "graduated" 2,500 fellows. They took 87 courses ranging from general economic management to social forestry and primary health care. The courses, which varied from two weeks to seven weeks depending on the objective, were given in English, Spanish, French, Arabic

"Expansion of countries' human capacity to manage their own development is a crucial task — many would say, the heart of the development problem," Mr. Willoughby stressed in explaining the school's mission of helping countries improve themselves eco-nomically.

The classes are run like graduate school seminars. "Although there are no exams, we give them an awful lot of reading to do," said Guy de Lusignan, the school's associate di-

The seminar directors are drawn from the World Bank itself, which has a corps of wellpaid specialists in just about every field of development. The institute started with three full-time instructors; now there are 40.

When it first got under way, the institute encountered some hesitancy and skepticism. In fact, the World Bank was so uncertain about the wisdom of the enterprise that it was willing to pay only half the costs. The other half came from grants by the Rockefeller and Ford Foundations.

There are a lot of countries that would be much poorer than they are if we hadn't financed dams and roads and ports and power 25 years ago," Mr. Black said in 1976. "But I sometimes think that the gamble we took in establishing EDI was one of the best things we did to help our member countries over the long run."

'Underground' U.S. Press Often Conservative

By David Kupferschmid

ASHINGTON — The Harvard Sa-lient, a self-proclaimed "alternative" student newspaper, is literally pro-duced underground. "We're stuck in a 12-by-5 basement room with a one-foot hot-water pipe running through it," said the editor in chief, Lars Waldorf.

Why do Mr. Waldorf and his staff put up with such conditions? "Missionary zeal," he said. "We want to convert what is the dominant ideology on campus."

The Salient is one of about 70 alternative campus newspapers launched recently around the United States. Their editors have much of the moral fervor of their anti-establishment, counterculture predecessors of the 1960s.

But there is one important difference: They are conservatives.

These weekly, monthly, or sometimes irregularly published papers — inspired by the provocative and widely publicized Dartmouth Review and helped by aid from a New York foundation - reflect the conservative mood of many of today's American students. That these publications are blossoming indicates that con-servatism, battered by the Vietnam War and the Watergate scandal, is regaining its intellectual and idealistic appeal on campus.

This brand of idealism, said Mr. Waldorf, is "about America and about what democracy can be." Unlike the radical campus press of the 1960s, the new papers cheerlead for "the system" - for capitalism at home, anti-communism abroad. Instead of denigrating big business, they take shots at big labor and government social programs.

Today's students, wrote George DeAngelo in The Observer, an alternative paper at Boston College, "don't scream about the supposed inequities of the profits of corporate America, because they want to share in those profits."

N campus issues, the conservative papers praise the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, fraternities and soronities, and traditional curriculums. They press for the elimination of "special interest" programs, in-cluding women's studies, Afro-American studies, affirmative action and college support for homosexual student groups, which they regard as products of a radicalism being advanced by faculty members and administrators who attended college in the 1960s.

What remains of real radicalism," Mr. DeAngelo wrote, "is a rather monibund collection of drippy, nostalgic sentiments clustered most often by the student editors as their political models. Thus, it is no coincidence that the campus papers have such names as the Washington Spectator and the Indiana Commentary. Wesleyan University's alternative paper changed its name from the Wesleyan Adversary, which publisher Andrew Goldman said was mistaken for "a neo-Marxist study group," to the Wesleyan Review.

Freedom of expression also formed the battle

Confrontation, however, was what launched the Dartmonth Review into the national limelight after its inception in 1980. And the Dartmouth Review has been the catalyst of this whole movement," said Jerome Taylor, editor of the University of Iowa's alternative paper, the Hawkeve Review.

The Dartmouth Review's Latin motto, which translates into "No one assails me with impunity," is instructive. The original members of the eview staff seemed to be inspired both by Jerry Rubin, a radical activist, and William F. Buckley Jr., a conservative writer and publisher. They provoked outrage with tactics borrowed from Mr. Rubin's Yippies, but at the same time exalted tradition, revered a free-market economy and set the Review's aristocratic tone.

Some of these other newspapers are just conservarive sheets." The Badger Herald, the Miami Tribune and the Dartmouth Review, each with annual bud-gets of around $100,000, are financially sound, Most of their kin are not.

HE struggling ones, said the Tribune's Mr. Johns, are making the mistake of "relying on the welfare state." He was alluding to the Institute for Educational Affairs in New York City, which has given an average of $6,000 in start-up funds to 61 of the papers.

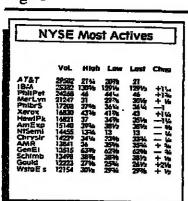

The institute, which describes itself as a "contrarian" nonprofit foundation, said in its annual report that "our grant programs have addressed an underlying antagonism toward traditional American life, institutions and values" in "much of the elite thinking that dominates classrooms, churches and media channels."

But Mr. Johns said that among the institute's beneficiaries, only the Dartmouth Review has become self-sufficient. And he said that most of the Review's money comes not from advertising but from alumni, who are perhaps the paper biggest fans. "We're the only conservative paper that has become self-sufficient by advertising."

Mr. Johns said. The institute estimates that about 20 of the conservative papers it helped have folded. Others are on the brink of insolvency, but new ones are springing up; the foundation expects eight more papers to apply for grants soon. Philip Marcus, president of the institute, said he is disappointed by the failures. He plans to reduce by more than 25 percent the size of the average grant, while advising students to seek

United Press International
NEW YORK — The stock market finished nixed Tuesday, with blue chips backtracking after spectacular gains and the broader list of issues advancing for the 12th day.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which gained 34.01 Monday, lost 1.87 to 1,259.50.

The New York Stock Exchange index advanced 0.16 to 101.28, topping the record high reached in the previous session. The price of an average share increased 5 cents.

average share increased 5 cents. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index rose 0.25 to 175.48, also topping a record reached in the Advances topped declines by a 9-7 ratio among the 2,067 issues traded.

Big Board volume the fourth-heaviest on record, totaling 174.77 million shares. On Mon-day, 146.83 million shares changed hands.

Robert Stovall of Dean Witter Reynolds said the results were better than might have been expected after Monday's huge gain. "There were signs of profit-taking with big stocks closing well below the highs of the day," he said.

But with stocks such as AT&T, IBM, General Motors, and Exxon in the forefront of the recent advance, Mr. Stovall said, it's likely that there will be further gains.

The Commerce Department reported the gross national product grew at a strong 3.9-percent annual rate in the fourth quarter of 1984. An earlier estimate for fourth-quarter GNP had the growth rate at 2.8 percent.

For all of 1984, GNP increased 6.8 percent, the best showing since 1951 the best showing since 1951. The report's measure of overall inflation showed a rate for 1984 of 3.7 percent, the best since 1967.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige pre-dicted the growth rate in early 1985 would be close to that seen in the fourth quarter of 1984. He said a stronger economy could bring higher interest rates but only if Congress does not take strong action in balancing the budget. For the very near future, he predicted interest rates will

The stock market has been responding to "lower interst rates, improved gross national product, optimism about the future and lower inflation," said Harry Villec of Sitro & Co., Palo Alto, California. He said compared to other investments, stocks have been undervalued for several years.

On the trading floor, AT&T was the most active NYSE-listed issue, unchanged at 21. IBM was second, up 1% to 129%.

Merrill Lynch was third, unchanged at 30. Two blocks of 481,000 shares crossed the tape at General Motors added 1/2 to 82%, Ford was unchanged at 491/2 and Chrysler fell 1/4 at 331/4. Exxon gained 1/8 to 4814, Chevron 1/8 to 331/4 and Son Co. ¼ to 46¼. Indiana Standard, which raised its quarterly dividend from 75 cents to 82.5 cents, gained 4 to 56½. Moibl lost 4 to 28 and Atlantic Richfield fell 4 to 45½.

Rockwell International, which reported first-quarter net of 94 cents per share vs. 59 cents, edded 16 to 73½.

Data General Corp., which reported firstquarter net of 87 cents per share vs. 40 cents, advanced 1 to 62%.

Digital Equipment, which reported second-quarter net of $1.81 vs. $1.41, jumped 2 to 113%.

Texas Instruments spurted 2% to 129%. Mo-torola added % to 37% and National Semiconductor shed 1/4 to 13.

Control Data fell 1/4 to 35% and Burroughs lost 11/2 to 611/4.

French Touch or U.S. Style? Some Say 'Bicultural' Best

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

By SHERRY BUCHANAN International Herald Tribune

RENCH companies with operations in the United States have had their share of problems. Among these are Cachare Moulinex, Rossignol Skis, Motobecane and Agache Willot. But some of the larger French groups, such as Moët Hemessy, Club Méditerranée, Meridien Hotels, the Perrier group, the software company Cap Gemini DASD, and Cosmair, the exqusive U.S. licensee of L'Oréal, have fashioned Cosmair, the exqueste U.S. licensee of L'Oreal, have rasmoned themselves a confortable spot in the U.S. market.

Some of thesemore successful companies share a management style and organization that have helped them in the U.S. market. Departing from the stereotype of French management, these groups are allkiecentralized with a senior, qually French, executive at the top who acts as mediator, translator, com-numicator and inancial plan-ner-and-advist between the French headquarters and the U.S. companes. Usually the U.S. companes in the group are manager by American to get a person who understands both mentalities."

It would be an exaggeration to say that there is a direct correlation biween management style and success or failure in the U.S. maret. In a year-old study done in the United States by Arthur Youg International and the French-American Chamber of Commerce, 61 percent of the French subsidiaries surveyed attributed efficulties to the competitive U.S. market, 26 percent jo high finace costs and only 13 percent to poor management. "Management problems have not been the main problem faced by French ampanies in the U.S.," said Serge Bellanger, president of the Freth-American Chamber of Commerce and executive vice president of Credit Industriel et Commercial in New York. Most of he companies surveyed attributed their success to a superior poduct line - but they also referred to two management facts as critical: marketing expertise and superior cus-tomer sence. Among the growing companies, these functions are usually uder U.S. management.

N advantage of keeping a Frenchman at the top is the song ties to headquarters that most managers believe are needed, especially during the start-up period. Yet many French lanagers expect to be replaced by an American sooner or later. Tey note that U.S. subsidiaries in Europe started with senior i.S. managers and gradually switched to Europeans.

"We planning for an American to take over," said Michel Berty president of Cap Gemini DASD, which specializes in consuling on software matters. "It's my job to train him and find him." Tap Gemini has been in the United States for four years.

"We pent six months besitating about whether to have an outsiar or somebody who would know everything about the group said Mr. Berty. "I was the first to suggest the latter and unwingly got the job. The next thing I knew I was moving with my failly to Milwaukee."

Sa Bernard Picot, president of the Moet Hennessy group in the latted States: "In some ways I am just a prolongation of the Frein holding company. It's important that the communication linebe good between the subsidiaries and the parent, especially in the beginning." Mr. Picot has been in the United States since 198 Same French companies that have been in the United States for more than 10 years, such as Cosmair, still have a Paris ma

What's important is to teach the L'Oreal way," said Jean Let, president of Cosman. Other French operations in the Used States want to keep a Frenchman at the top as part of the image. "We try to have French managers," said Robert J. eneral manager of the Hotel Parker-Meridien in New Yk. Despite his own Anglo-Saxon habits at breakfast —he eats

17% Rise Came On Lower Sales

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches CHICAGO - Standard Oil Co. of Indiana has reported that conolidated net income for 1984 rose 17 percent from a year earlier to a record $2.183 billion, or $7.70 a share, from $1.868 billion, or $6.39

The rise came despite a decline in revenue, to $29 billion from $29.5 billion a year earlier, the company

Fourth-quarter net income rose only slightly from the 1983 period, to $465 million, or $1.72 a share, from $459 million, or $1.75 a share, the company said Monday.

Revenue slipped to $7 billion in the period from $7.41 billion a year

The earnings gains reflected im-provements in all of Indiana Standard's principal lines of business, Richard M. Morrow, chairman and chief executive officer, said.

Exploration and production operations benefited primarily from higher volumes in worldwide crude oil and natural gas production, the company said.

Chemical earnings reached a re-cord high as sales volumes and margins improved for all major product lines. Refining marketing and transportation operations also reported improved results over 1983.

However, the company said the improvement in those areas was due primarily to more favorable non-operating factors.

The Chicago-based company also said it raised its quarterly dividend on common stock by 71/2 cents share, to 821/2 cents, payable March 10 to holders of record Feb.

The company's shares rose 75 cents Tuesday on the New York Stock Exchange, to close at $56.50. (UPI, Reuters)

A U.S. Trader's Silken Ties to China

Shamash & Co. Develops Key Role in 2 Countries

By Clyde H. Farnsworth

New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Jack Shamash, a New York-based trader, recently signed an agreement in the northern Chinese city of Dalien, then celebrated with his partners at a multi-course banques highlighted by frequent toasts and servings of crunchy fried silkworms.

The peanut-sized silkworms, a not uncommon food in China, were singularly appropriate because Mr. Shamash had just signed a joint venture with China Silk Corp., one of the biggest of the state-owned enterprises. It produces silk in nearly all of China's provinces and employs 50 million workers.

Mr. Shamash and his Western partner in the Dalien venture, Courtaulds Ltd. of London, each agreed to invest $1.5 million to set up a dying-and-firiishing plant in China for pussah silk, a rough-finishing plant in China for tussah silk, a roughtextured fabric used for blazers and other sportswear. His family-owned trading company, S. Shamash & Sons of New York, will market the fabric to apparel makers worldwide. Courtsulds, an old-line British textile producer, is supplying an old-line British textile producer, is supplying the manufacturing expertise.

The United States imports $100 million worth of silk annually. $20 million of which comes from China — and 80 percent of the Chinese imports are handled by the Shamash company. The roots of this relationship go back a century. Mr. Shamash, 60, was born in Baghdad but came to New York City as a teenager. He is descended from a family of Iraqi merchants which has traded with China for more than 100 years. for more than 100 years.

Mr. Shamash is one of the few China traders to survive in America after the years of China's isola-tion from the West. With the doors wide open again, S. Shamash & Sons is booming, not only as a textile merchant, but also as a broker for other American companies seeking business with the

As the leading silk importer into the United States, Mr. Shamash has a network of contacts both in Beijing and the provinces. Now that the provinces have been given more economic autonomy, he is being asked increasingly to advise them both on investment and export policies. He recently helped Szechuan province, for example, on the sale of glassware to the United States.

At the same time, through new relationships with Jardine-Matheson, the giant Hong Kong trading company, Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co. and Courtaulds, he is emerging as a broker engaged in belping American and other foreign companies either sell or invest in China through joint ventures with the Chinese. When not in Dalien, Mr. Shamash may be in Beijing, Shanghai or Guangzhou, or in the prov-inces. He makes several trips annually, spending two to three months a year in China. He travels with a guide, but rarely uses an interpreter, relying instead on what he describes as passable Manda-

Typically, after a flight to a provincial city, a shaky, vintage Toyota will take him from the airport to hotels like the Dalien, a faded and cracked structure in Dalien town, or the New Swan Hotel in Harbin, a city in Hellongjiang province. Sometimes he stops at the Shanghai Peace Hotel, which used to be owned by a trading company that his grandfather and father had been connected

Jack Shamash: A 100-year family tradition that started with teas and opium.

"Our family has been associated with China for 100 years, starting with my grandfather Saleh Sha-mash, who represented E.D. Sassoon, a Baghdad-based company with branches in India and Chi-na," Mr. Shamash said. "They traded in teas, silks and opium."

Saleh Shamash not only represented the Sassoon

trading company but was related to the Sassoon family by marriage, and named his son for them. Sassoon Shamash established his own trading company, first in Baghdad and later in New York.

His on — who early on simplified his given name from Jacques to Jack — was sent from Baghdad to school in England, but completed his education at Horace Mann High School in the Bronx, New York, and the University of Virginia; then he joined the family business in New York. He has never lived in China.

In 1949, after the Communists came to power, Sassoon Shamash moved his Far East operations out of China to Japan, and concentrated on developing trade with Korea. But in April 1972, two months after President Richard M. Nixon's trip to Beijing, S. Shamash & Sons was invited by the government to return to the China silk business. "China trade runs in the blood," Mr. Shamash said. "That's probably why they invited us back. They're believers in tradition." He added: "Personal relationships are extremely

The company said its new model 9955, priced at $321,000, will be available immediately. The market for minicomputers has rapidly grown as many corporations have found that their em-ployees need faster computers that can handle more data than can personal computers.

As the needs have grown further, companies have chosen to buy super-minicomputers rather than mainframes because with superminis they can transfer their old programs and data. Mainframes require users to buy new software and enter new data and can cost as much as $1 million. "We're seeing tremendous degeneration ideally suited to small- market. scale needs. Electricity is generated in the cells in an electrochemical reaction between hydrogen, which is extracted from natural gas and other sources, and oxygen.

The company, to be called inter-national Fuel Cells Corp., is to be established next month in South Windsor, Connecticut, with an ini-tial work force of 560, including researchers, a Toshiba spokesman said. The venture, to be owned equally by the partners, will be cap-italized at $8 million, he said.

He said the new company plans to develop by 1989 a fuel-cell powplant capable of generating 11,000 kilowants of electricity. He added that by 1992, the new company hopes to produce 20 such plants for sale.

The two companies have jointly built an experimental 4,800-kilowatt fuel-cell power plant outside Tokyo, which has been in operation

Scurce: Reviers. Malaysia Weighs Firm Acquisitions KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia

— Malaysia may acquire some multinational tire companies to multinational tire companies to achieve its objective of becoming a leading tire exporter, a government minister said Tuesday.

Paul Leong, the minister of primary industries, said that in an effort to increase growth in rubberbused industries, Malaysia plans to manufacture tires. He said the acquisition of some companies could help Malaysia obtain much needed ready-made research and development facilities as well as the worldwide tire-marketing networks needed to become a top exporter.

Mr. Leong did not say whether Malaysian government agencies or the private sector would undertake tuch acquisitions, but said the cabisuch acquisitions, but said the cabi

Taiwan Foreign Orders Rise

TAIPEI — Foreign orders received by Taiwan's manufacturers and exporters totaled $31.6 billion in 1984, up from $25.7 billion in 1983, the Economic Ministry said Tuesday. In December 1984 orders totaled $2.44 billion, down 3.56 percent from November but up 0.41 percent from the year-earlier period, it said. OTTAWA — The consumer price index rose 0.1 percent in December, compared with a 0.6-percent increase in November and a 0.3-percent rine in December 1983, Statistics Canada said Tuesday. period, it said.

Japan, Soviet In Trade Talks

TOKYO — Japan an-nounced Tuesday that it had resumed trade talks with the Soviet Union, the first such discussions between the two nations since Japan imposed sanctions on the Soviet Union after the 1981 crackdown on Poland. A Foreign Ministry spokesman said the two countries opened the 25th round of talks in the Japan-USSR Annual Consultations on Trade.

Trade between the two countries has been declining in recent years. Japanese figures show that Japan exported $1.3 billion in goods to the Soviet Union in the first half of 1984, down 18 percent from the year before. During the same period, the Soviet Union exported $730 million to Japan_

THE KNIGHT IN HISTORY

By Frances Gies. 192 pp $16.95. Harper & Row, 10 East 53d Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by John Espey

I F George Frederic Watts's painting of Sir Galahad represents your notion of a true knight, the dedicated youth whose "strength was as the strength of 10 because his heart was pure." and you have no wish to alter your view, this alluring history of knighthood from its beginnings in the Middle Ages to its nostalgic revival in the reign of Victoria is not for you.

If, on the other hand, Galahad's being the bastard son of Lancelot has ever made you curious about the whole matter, Frances Gies will give you not only answers but will also provide an account of the varied roles played by knights in Europe and the Holy Land, the significance of the stirrup's invention, the real and imagined sexual feats of courtly lovers and

As Gies observes, our popular image of the knight is largely English; the Arthurian cycle, even in Sidney Lanier's watered-down version of Malory, still casts a powerful spell. The true origin was French, and the knight's advance in status covered centuries: "Originally a personality of mediocre status raised above the peasant by his possession of expensive horse and armor, the knight slowly improved his position in society until he became part of the nobility."

As the population grew, and oldest sons became sole heirs to family property, knighthood (like the church) provided a safety valve as a career for younger sons. Originally op-posed to knighthood, the church found ways to incorporate and make use of it, founding the orders of the Templars and the Hospitalers (often in conflict between themselves) to hold the territories seized by successive Crusaders.

The Troubadours, centered in southern France and composing in Provençal, created the chief literature of knighthood. Gies provides a useful introduction to this complex poetry, concentrating on Arnaut Daniel and the theme of love. In view of the fact that knights were, above all else, warriors, she may unduly neglect the work of Bertrand de Born, the one great celebrator of the actual clash of battle. She mentions his lament over the death of Henry II's rebellious son, but does not give the melodramatic circumstances under which it was delivered. According to the often lictitious biographies of the poets, Bertrand risked death by presenting himself before the king and delivering his song.

So much of chivalry's lore is sheer romance that the three chapters given to actual persons, William Marshai ("Knighthood at Its Zenith"), Bertrand du Guesclin ("A Knight of the Fourteenth Century") and Sir John Fastolf ("English Knights of the Fifteenth Century"), stand out in their precise, human detail and their recording of genuine personalities.

Knighthood slowly turned into ritual. During the reign of the first Elizabeth, tournaments were staged, but it was left to the Victorians to revive knighthood in the pages of Scott's novels, Tennyson's idylls, the craze for "Gothic" architectural restorations and the pre-Ra-phaelites' narrative paintings. In 1839, the wealthy young Earl of Eglinton put on a tournament with all the trappings at his castle in Ayrshire. A torrential downpour soaked the opening procession, but its leader, Lord Londonderry, carried on bravely under a large preen umbrella. Two days later, in sunlight, the pageant was restaged, but it was the memory of the knight-with the pageant was restaged, but it was the memory of "the knight-with-the-umbrella" that endured.

Nevertheless, Gies points out, much of the idealism survived. She writes, apparently quite without irony: "Above all, the heroes of the Newer of Table were offered as examples to how Round Table were offered as examples to boys in school, in sport, and finally (1908) in the founding of the Boy Scouts." Well, yes, I suppose; but remembering some of my Scoutmaster's oddities. I wouldn't care to press the issue. Apart from all that, "The Knight in History," with more than 50 illustrations drawn from an account illuminations and other sources is manuscript illuminations and other sources, is a carefully researched, concise, readable and entertaining account of an institution that remains a part of the Western imagination.

John Espey, professor emeritus of literature at the University of California at Los Angeles, wrote this review for the Los Angeles Times.

SAN FRANCISCO - In the last four seasons, the San Francisco 49ers have made it to the National Conference championship game three times.

Both times they won that game they went on to win the Super Bowl. Discounting the strike-shortened season as an aberration, the overall record of those three San Francisco teams is 45-11.

This year's team won 18 of 19 games, allowed the least number of points in the leasne, and in Sunday's Super Bowl not only scored 38 points but also shut down the most prolific passing offense the NFL had ever seen.

All that might not make Bill Walsh a gemus, but it does give him the right to say something other than, "Aw shucks, it was nothing." Given the choice of listening to false modesty or immodesty, I'll take immodesty every time.

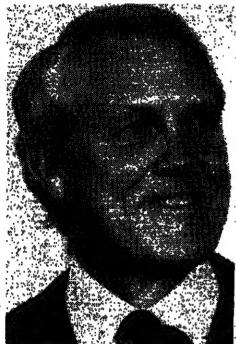

So will Walsh. Which is, apparently, why he is not the most popular fellow in the league. It's one thing to be a coach and have to watch Walsh pluck you clean and leave your feathers blowing in the wind, It's quite another to have to watch him pick his teeth with your bones.

For example, immediately after the Super Bowl, Walsh called his 49ers "clearly the best team competing today - including some of the major universities." (Gracious? Not particularly. Accurate?

He did it again Monday, summing up a variety of reasons why San Francisco won by saying, "It just came to pass that Miami played a better team and was beaten." Thank you, Next.

Walsh stands there, a cultured pearl of a man with silver hair and steel rims, delivering body shot after body shot to a corpse. No, he wasn't surprised at anything Miami did. No, he wasn't surprised at the relative ease with which his defense handled Dan Marino. "We were simply a superior de-

Nor was he surprised at the way his offense marched methodically — and at the same time almost casually — up and down the field. "We saw that we could move the ball on them immediately."

Nothing about the scope of the victory surprised him. Few football coaches on this level would even dare think such things, let alone say them. Walsh not only says them, he says them with authority.

And then there are the things he doesn't say, the things he leaves implicit, for the rest of the world to say for him. By now almost everyone knows that the 49ers - exclusively on offense and generally on defense—are an extension of Walsh personally and of his philosophies that defensive football should be stunning and decisive while offensive football should be controlled and acquisitive. So if the 49ers are "great" and "dominating who but Walsh should get the credit? And when he says of Marino, as he did Monday, "... This awesome passer, going into the game it appeared he couldn't even be slowed down, let alone stopped," and you know that Marino was in fact throttled, who but Walsh should get the credit? And when he calls Joe Montana "without question the greatest quarterback football has seen in years," and you know - because Montana's said it - that all he does is drive the car he's given, who but Walsh should get the credit?

Walsh is a professional football coach, but he is not on the same page as the rest of them in the NFL. Sometimes, I suspect, by design as well as good fortune. He often seems too delicate, too urbane, too clean and polished to be wasting his time around fat men in cleats.

It took him so long — until he was 50 — to become a head coach in the NFL. And every other year or so, it seems, he threatens to quit, saying the game is exhausting him, until once again he becomes convinced it's in everyone's best interests for him to stay on. On the one hand, he is like Hamlet brooding how "the time is out of joint. Oh cursed spite, that ever I was born to set it right."

And on the other, he's a little like Diana Ross telling a stagehand, "Turn up the house lights, baby, so I can see all the people who love me."

Yet for all his transparencies, I find Walsh refreshing. Not so much because he can talk about things other than football; there's merit in that, but there's no shame in devoting yourself to one disci-pline. I like him because he's not afraid to cut himself away from the herd. When you ask him if winning this Super Bowl gives him a feeling of personal accomplishment, he doesn't hide behind a team, or a set of coaches and players or a library of game films. He says, "It's a great personal satisfaction. You have to be so darn guarded in my business, because every week you play someone else who's ready to take you out. But there's no game next week, so I can talk now.

"At this point I take a lot of pride in our offense, the dimensions of it, the fact that we use all our receivers. I think absolutely that we are the most prolific offense in football."

And I like him because he's not ashamed of his ambition. A couple of years ago, after his first Super Bowl. Walsh conceded that becoming a head coach so late -- he was 47 when he was hired at Stanford - would surely limit his contribution to the game he had loved since his California childhood. "Til never dominate the game like a Bear Bryant did," Walsh said. "I'll never own it. But I'd like to have pushed it a little."

There's an old story about great coaches gathered together around a blackboard. The offensive es diagram something unstoppable only to see the defensive geniuses thwart them with something impenetrable.

It goes on that way for hours until only one Walsh: Not afraid to cut away from the herd. chalk wins." I'd give my chalk to Walsh.

Were it not too obscene an irrelevance to the struggle for life, Ethiopia might have anticipated springing a surprise in Mexico. Alas, that is another thing that comes too late for Ethiopians: Their team lost narrowly in the qualifying round

But what of Europe, which can supply 13 of the 24 cup's finalists? Its protest against unnecessary, unfair early kickoffs is muted.

Players are complaining about having to compete in "sauna conditions," but it is officials who lodge protests. Or rather, in João Havelange's FIFA, do not protest. It probably matters less to them whether they sip gratis drinks un-der the midday sun or in the relative cool of evening. They never played at this level, or have long forgotten the tax on wind and limb. Or perhaps they are all true disci-ples of the FIFA president's profit-before-propriety leadership.

That would explain the apparent disregard to players' welfare or supporters' comfort that allowed Juventus and Liverpool to go ahead with the so-called "super cup" match in Turin last Wednesday. Italian determination to mount this glorified exhibition - for health.

Juventus had presold tickets to Turin was subsequently hit by its heaviest snowfall in 20 years, the Stadio Comunale surface buried by almost a foot, the airport closed. Game on, the Italians insisted.

Liverpool's plane was told to go instead to Genoa. Game on, repeated Juve, whose benefactor, Giovanni Agnelli, ordered bulldozers so that Liverpool - and Liverpool alone - could land in Turin. Snowplows and many hands cleared the pitch. Gas heaters and chemical sprays took some of the bone out of the turf - and, as Juve said, game on.

Commented Europe's "golden boot," Ian Rush: "The pitch was very tricky, It was soft in places, hard in others." Rush never got in a Michel Platini, European player of the year, agreed about the pitch but was one of three players — all foreigners - to transcend it.

Bruce Grobbelsar, Liverpool's Zimbabwian goalic, reacted like a wildcat to catch a 22-yard Platini special that bent as if by radar, While all around him lost their feet, Zbigniew Boniek, the Vatican's Polish gift to Juventus, kept his to score, in the 39th and 75th minutes, the only goals of the night. If it's true that Inventus does not intend to retain Boniek this summer, he could make a threesome with Torvill and Dean.

Liverpool retreated happy with its takings, relieved that its only casualty was Mark Lawrenson (who jarred a hamstring), ready to nod and wink that if the teams snow once people inside the game Graeme Souness, then of Liverpool, and the 1984 European Cup. meet in serious European action its are required to testify.

Strangely, one Liverpool expatriate became so heated he completely lost his head. Graeme Souness gave up playing for Liverpool to add his mixture of guile and spite to Sampdoria of Genoa: hired by the BBC to add insight to its radio broadcast, he saw nothing but red. He considered Boniek's first goal offside, and minutes later when the linesman ignored what Sounces would swear on the Bible was the most blatant offside he'd ever seen. he yelled: "It's nothing but cheating... Nothing but cheating!"

His professional commentating partners suggested in hushed tones that was going a bit far. "It's an absolute joke." retorted Sources. "You just wonder if some of the things you hear are true - you wonder watching this if the officials here are not taking bribes."
He would not be quelled: "I may get into trouble, but it's criminal down there," he continued.

Souness seldom sees "live" games as a spectator and might be well advised to continue the habit of abstension, Otherwise, if he is going to repeat all he hears in Italy, the snakepit of bruited soccer corruption, he will wind up ostracized and barred from the land of lire.

If, on the other hand, he can justify comments taken by millions of listeners as gospel, I offer this space for chapter and verse.

He won't make a fortune, but he would do the game a service if he could clear the air about bribery allegations that dissolve like the

INDIANAPOLIS — You know things have been tough when a double-overtime loss looks good. "We have to play games like to-night's," said Golden State's John Bach after the Warriors battled val-iantly before dropping a 129-127 decision to the Indiana Pacers here

The One-Minute Million

By Russell Baker EW YORK - The kid is in television, which is big, Larry, very big, as you know, and I am proud of him. My kid. "In television," I tell people, and they say,
"Ah, TV, huh? Very big, You must be proud."

Sure, I'm proud. Listen, Larry, like you, I have always been small potatoes. My whole family, like yours and what did we talk about? Small talk, right?

And now, thanks to this kid, I can finally have some big talk. "Come on over," I say to him on right. He reads, even if he is in television. He has read Fred Allen's line about New York being a place where "small men sit around enjoy-ing big talk," and maybe he thinks I am trying to make a monkey of him.

"Why don't we just get in some beer and watch 'Gunga Din' again on the VCR?" he says.

But I am not teasing the kid, Larry, because, honest to God, I really like hearing the big talk. It gives me such a sense of the scope of history and change in the world. For example, he got me thinking about how sad it is, what's happened to A Million Dollars in my for Jujubes.

A Million Dollars - I still say it with awe myself. You too, proba-bly. Remember when we were kids what it meant? A Million Dollars. Remember who had A Million Dollars, Larry?

Daddy Warbucks had A Million Dollars, John D. Rockefeller had A Million Dollars. That Saturday afternoon we went to the movies remember the newsreel shot of John D. Rockefeller in which he was celebrating his 95th birthday, or something close, by giving out dimes to all his servants?

It sounds cheap now, but it looked pretty good at the time, eh, Larry? I remember you saying "Wow, if we worked for John D. Rockefeller, with our happy-birth-day dimes we'd be able to go to $10,000 or so, or we'd denounce him for stiffing the help. Please notice, Larry, that I am engaging in big think. It results from big talk I heard from the kid.

"Did you know that TV commercial time during the Super Bowl cost A Million Dollars a minute?"

"You wouldn't fun your old dad-dy, would you?" I said.

Even when the idea - maybe they call it a "concept" nowadays even when the concept sank in, I didn't really cry. Just sat there get-ting quieter and quieter and filling up with lugubrium, or lugubrious-ness, or whatever you call it when the phone. "Come on over so I can have some big talk."

Naturally he's embarrassed. 1 like that. It shows I raised him

The with lugubrium, or lugubriousness, or whatever you call it when the melancholy for glories that are past is seeping into your marrow.

The with lugubrium, or lugubriousness, or whatever you call it when the melancholy for glories that are past is seeping into your marrow. the melancholy for glories that are

That A Million Dollars had come to this, And in my lifetime. A sum once possessed only by the earth's titans — Warbucks, Rocke-feller, the Sultan of Hyderabad my childhood's monetary symbol of magnificence was now so trifling that it could buy only a 60-second opportunity to hawk snake oil be-tween touchdowns.

Larry, Larry, what has the world come to? And in our lifetime? While the kid was destroying the sense of values on which I'd built my life, I started remembering other proof of the galloping decay, and I don't just mean Weinberger and those Pentagon airheads talking about $50 billion like it was money

Something came back to me, something so monstrous I'd forgot-ten it until the kid activated my brain. It was a row house I saw in Manhattan last month. It was smaller, more decrepit and located in a dumpier neighborhood than that similar row house you bought in 1956 in Baltimore for $24,000.

The Manhattan row house was priced at A Million Dollars, plus a little change; to wit, $200,000. I remember saying to the real-estate agent, "You mean for A Million Dollars, plus $200,000, you cannot buy Calumet Farm and half the rest of Kentucky, but only a $20,000 Baltimore row house?"

I guess the shock was so bad I immediately blacked it out until the kid came over and started talking football commercials. What I'm saying, Larry, is, what's the point of being a millionaire anymore?

Jean-Michel Folon's 'Transparent Fogs'

By John G. H. Oakes national Herald Tribune BURCY, France — There are two sorts of artists, Jean-Michel Folon says: "Those who stay in their ateliers like monks, and those who live, who work from their memories." To what he calls "the house at the end of the world" (only an hour from Paris) the 50-year-old artist returns from his wide-ranging travels to mine his memories. His trademarks — gentle pastel colors, sweeping horizons, spare stick figures — have apparently touched a popular chord.

Primarily watercolors and pastels, Folon's art is in constant and growing demand for posters, magazines, advertisments, galleries and exhibitions.

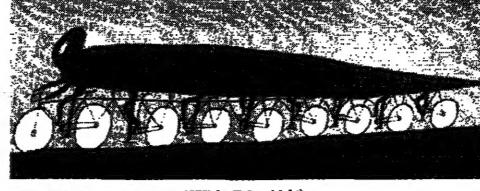

It was a long journey: After he left his native Belgium for France in 1960, Folon "died of hunger for six years," living in a gardener's shack and "drawing, drawing, drawing, drawing, drawing, drawing, after having rushed in from an interview in Paris, he can speak for barely 15 minutes without being interrupted by the ring-ing of the telephone.

Exhausted, he sinks onto a couch and toys with his bright yellow sneakers. His already soft voice sinks to a near whisper.
"You shouldn't get the idea I'm stuck in this house all the time." Folon says - as if there were any danger of that. In the tiny farming community of Burry he found the peace he needed as well as a reminder of the open countryside of Belgium. "I like spaces. It's quiet. It's the flat country of Jacques Brel," he said. He fled it he reached 21, abandoning Brussels and archi-tecture studies for the bohemian life across the border. "I had no money, but the problem then wasn't how to pay the rent or buy bread. It was how to buy paper

Now, he sees nothing so exciting about France, and spends fewer than three months a year at his studio in the countryside.
"France often bores me," he said.
"I have understood the light and space here," he said, gestur-ing at the expanse of fields outside the window. "I am sick of the heavy gray sky. I move around a lot. The Red Sea. Venice. New York, California,"

"La Métamorphose" (detail, 1973) by Folon (right).

He added: "I like America and it likes me. My first success was there." His favorite city is "magic" New York, and it was there he found a market for his work in Time magazine, The New Yorker and other publications. It was there, too, that he had his first exhibition, at the LeFebre Gal-lery in 1969.

He does not speak English, and understands very little. "I think it's one of the reasons I idealize New York," he said, referring to his necessary dependence on "purely visual experience" while in the United States, "It's a country I look at. If I understand it, it's with my eyes alone.

"Paris is always Paris, Venice is always Venice. But New York, as such, doesn't exist. It's a collage of dozens of communities and cultures, of extremes of wealth and poverty."

Like J. M. W. Turner, one of Folon's favorite artists and another master of watercolor, Folon feels an attraction for Venice. "Venice is the town of water. That's the watercolor town, a lot of water, a little color. You have to do watercolors for 10 years before you understand how much water and how little color you

"Watercolors flow into each other, unlike oils. It's marvelous, the changes between red and blue, for example. It's like a man and a woman, making a child. Never the same, always a differ-ent shade of violet."

What attracts him in Turner is what Folon calls "the intensity, the depth of the work." Folon strives to achieve this same depth, and it is for this reason that he

"I need their transparent fogs of color. I hate walls. I like windows. I want the viewer to be drawn deep into the work. I don't like that which is on a plane, which has no depth. Most paintings are like that.

The viewer should be lost in the image. For example, I'll paint a person, and behind the person is a hill, behind the hill the rising sun, behind the sun a galaxy. It goes on forever."

The figures in Folon's work are stripped bare. "The person I con-sistently portray is as simple as possible. He is not recognizable to anybody and he is recognizable to everybody. I put a hat on his head to add to his anonymity. He has two holes for eyes. A line for the nose, a line for the mouth. He never laughs and never cries. He has no expression.
"I use the fewest elements possible, so what remains is the essential

This is the universal man, for Folon - a creation that reflects the general alienation of humans from society. Folon develops his themes out of a profound humancharity works.

third of his illustrations have had as their subject matter some sort of humanistic appeal, such as calls for amnesty for political prisoners, protests against capital realism and abstraction, Folon punishment. The last poster he calls himself an observer and incompleted was for a fund-raising appeal for the victims of the 1980 railroad-station bombing in Bo-

"It goes beyond politics," he said. "It's respect for the human person that interests me." 'Art for art's sake doesn't attract me," Folon said. "Of course, I like certain abstract artists, such ism, as evidenced by his frequent as Mondrian. Klee and Kanharity works.

Over the past 20 years, about a tographs of Henri Cartier-Breshird of his illustrations have had son than in works of abstract art that you're going to find witness-es of the 20th century."

Treading the thin line between realism and abstraction, Folon terpreter of reality. For him, the great abstract painters, despite their genius, were "stay-at-homes for whom art was a religion."

"My nature leads me to tell about what's going on today. My images speak about reality," he said.

Thrill Not Cheap at $750

after receiving a 48-page, $750 ta Ana, California, say they will help resolve the problem of the bill run up by Bitters's son on their new Talk Line service. Bitters complained to Pacific Bell about the charges made by her son, Darrin, 18, after the telephone company sent an advertisement to 32,000 California residents between the ages of 12 and 19. With TalkLine, teen-agers can talk with as many as 15 other youths simultaneously, for reduced charges. The company advertised the experimental service as "a cheap thrill," the utility's answer to "the neighborhood pub." Bitters, while conceding that Darrin overdid it with TalkLine, criticized the phone company for advertising the service to people who are not legally responsible for the bills they run up. A phone company spokes-man, Mike Runzler, said about a dozen complaints had been re-ceived. He called the Bitters situation "out of the ordinary," and said the company was trying to work out a solution acceptable to both parties. Runzler said the company would "reconsider" its advertising if it received a significant number of complaints.

Kathryn D. Sullivan, 33, was the first American woman to walk in space. Now she has added a personal first to her resume: a solo flight by glider. Sullivan, who in October circled Earth in the open cargo bay of the space shuttle Challenger for more than three hours, made her maiden solo sailplane flight at Estrella Sailport, south of Phoenix, Arizona. "She was able to solo on her eighth flight, after only four hours of instruction," said Les Horvath, who operates the sailport.
